
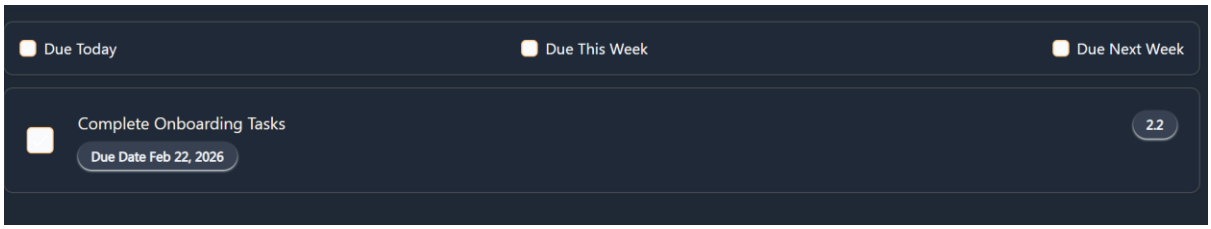
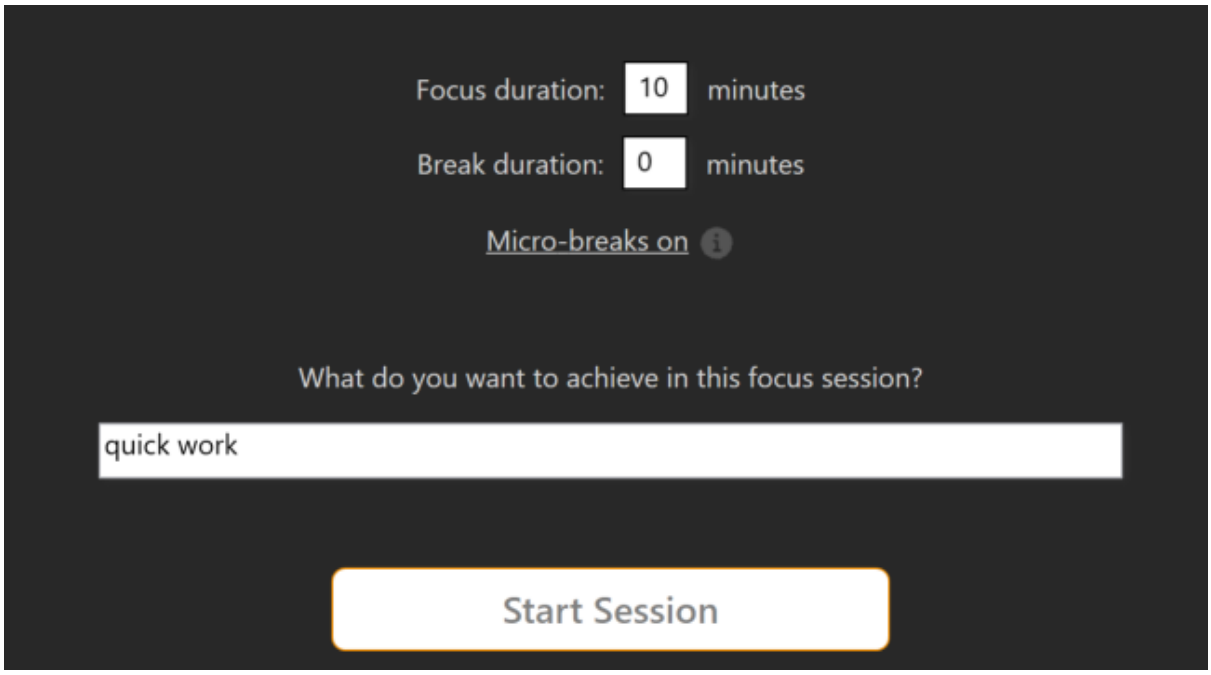
1. It was confusing to find the toggle to make the app window appear instead of just a small popup window. Didn't realise that any of the options/buttons led to the large window appearing. I think it would be much better to have a dedicated button for the app window to fully open.



2. Check marking a task instantly removes it from the list, without any way of readding it back if it was an accidental click. I think a much better option would be to have an alert dialog open to confirm whether the user intends to remove the task item. Perhaps it would also make sense to archive the completed task in another tab, in case the user wants to revisit it.

3. Not “annoying” per say, but the brain dump page just being a single white page feels somewhat lacking. It feels much better for me to dump ideas into separate “notes”, like sticky notes on a whiteboard if that makes sense.



4. Not Being able to start a focus session without a break duration set is a little annoying. I was confused on why the button to start the session was disabled for no clear reason, until I realised the mandator break duration setting. It would be better to have a note of this for users to know, or just remove that setting entirely.

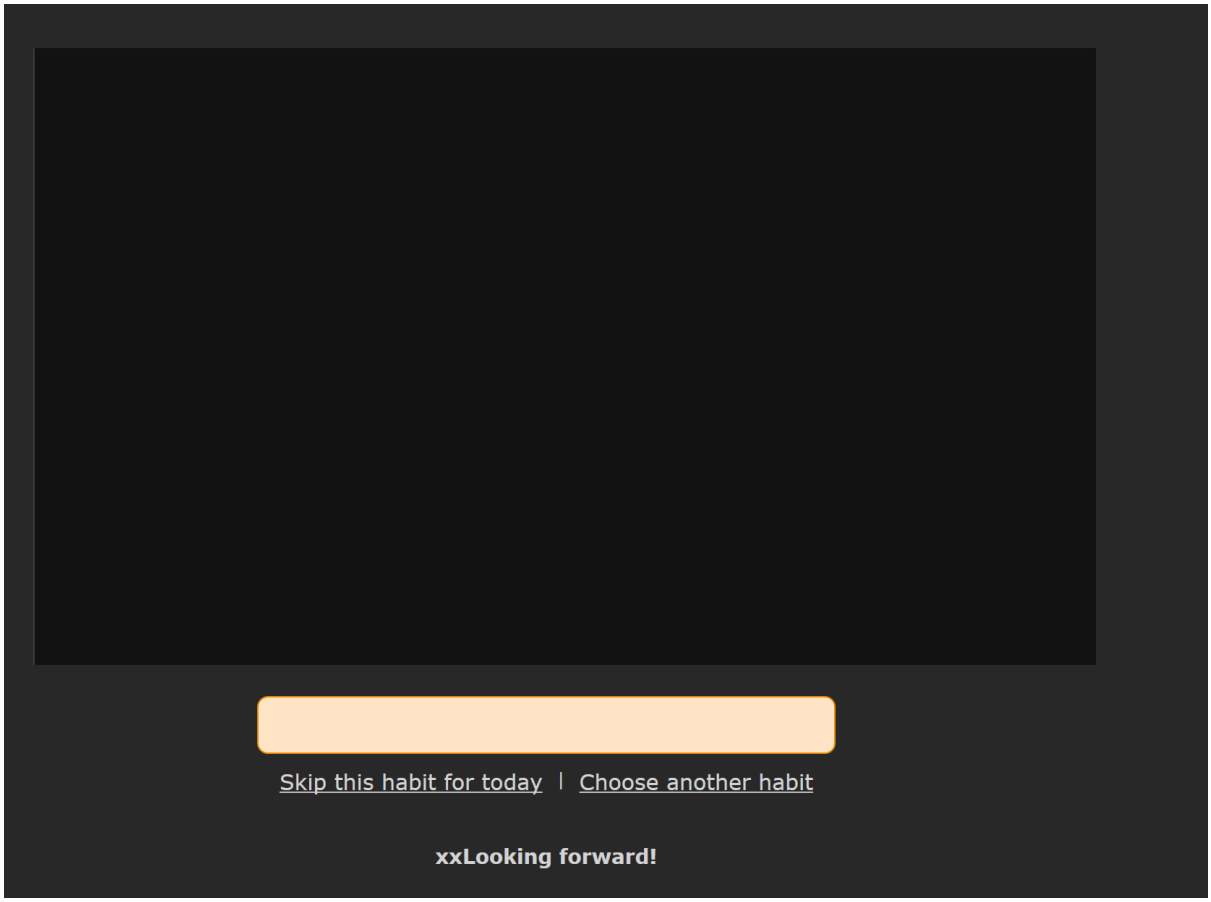
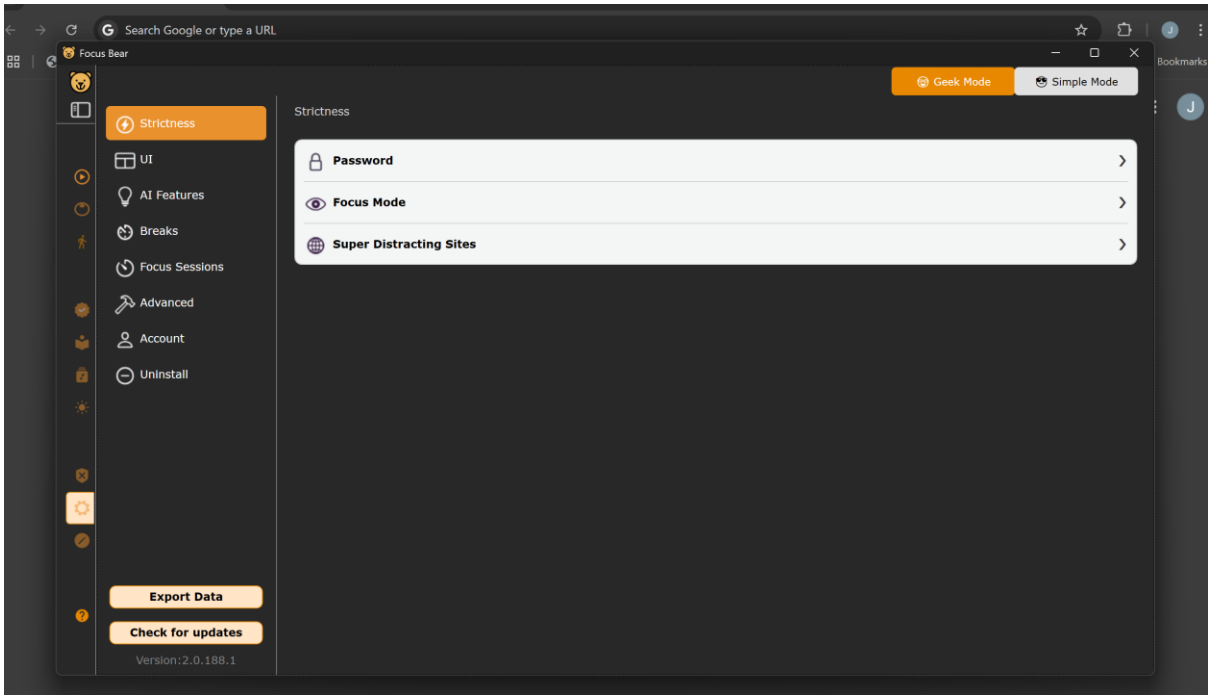
5. Changing preferences always needs a restart to apply changes. This is annoying when I want to test and choose the settings I want. It frustrated me and made me stop tinkering with the app settings.



6. There seems to be a bug when I'm going through my habits. Skipping through them led to black screens without knowing which habit it is.



7. Clicking on another app or window does not put the focus bear app window behind it, making it so that I must fully close the focus bear window instead. This is somewhat annoying since I'm used to switching to other app windows by alt tabbing or clicking on windows behind them.